Case Wednesday Afternoon

Questions at Length

Contrary to expectations the Frank hearing before Governor Slaton was not completed Wednesday morning. At 12:45 p. m. an adjournment was taken until 10 a. m. Attorney Howard, who spoke for four hours yesterday morning, today morning held the floor throughout the afternoon and will resume his argument at the afternoon session. It is expected that the hearing will end during the afternoon.

In resuming his argument Wednesday morning, Mr. Howard directed the attention of the court to the contention of Solicitor Dorsey that even with an elimination of Conley's testimony there is still evidence sufficient to convict Frank.

This, said Mr. Howard, brings us back to one of the fundamental principles of our law. If you rely on circumstantial evidence to convict a man, it must be such a positive character as to satisfy the mind of the jury. It must be sufficiently strong to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis.

Mr. Howard then elaborately outlined his contention in this connection that Conley's evidence against Frank indicated that Conley was a liar and that the evidence eliminated there is not a single circumstance of sufficient weight to influence the jury.

Governor Slaton interrupted to inquire of Solicitor Dorsey whether, in the indictment found against Frank before or after Conley began making his affidavit.

Mr. Dorsey answered that the indictment was returned on the day Conley was sworn to the grand jury with the officers, that Conley's affidavit was brought to him while the grand jury was in session, and that after being taken through the factors Conley was brought before the grand jury.

However, he did not read Conley's affidavit to the grand jury on that day, but he did read the grand jury, he said, something about Conley's affidavit.

Mr. Howard demanded to know whether Conley's affidavit was given to the grand jury and whether it was used as one of the grounds upon which the indictment was returned.

Mr. Dorsey replied that the indictment was returned on the day Conley was sworn to the grand jury with the officers, that Conley's affidavit was brought to him while the grand jury was in session, and that after being taken through the factors Conley was brought before the grand jury.

However, he did not read Conley's affidavit to the grand jury on that day, but he did read the grand jury, he said, something about Conley's affidavit.

WASHINGTON, June 16.—(By Associated Press.)—A Zeppelin raid over the northeast coast of England last night caused the heaviest loss of life among non-combatants from such attacks during the war, with the exception of yesterday's raid by French aeroplanes over Karlsruhe, Germany. Details of the attack on the English coast were held back by the British censor, but it is announced officially that fifteen people were killed and as many more wounded, and that several fires were started by the bombs. The attack on Karlsruhe caused the death of thirteen persons and fourteen were wounded seriously.

The invasion of the province of Trent by the Italians is proceeding steadily and, according to the Italian general staff, the dominating positions gradually are being occupied. The Austrians, who have dispatched 25,000 men from Trent to resist the invaders, have not yet accepted battle on the basis from the Austrians have been elaborate defenses, including in some locations several lines of trenches of masonry or concrete.

German claims of new successes in Galicia are confirmed in part by an official statement from Petrograd. It is said the Germans brought up fresh troops, and the Russians were compelled to fall back. No mention is made of Moscow, the capture of which was announced yesterday at Berlin.

The British army on the western front has not yet received the news of the British army's success in the capture of the town of Jansonne, which was reported by the British army yesterday.

EX-GOVERNOR BROWN REPLIES TO MR. HOWARD

Statement About Pardons,
Made on Frank Argument,
Incorrect, He Says

Editor The Journal:

I was quite surprised to note that Hon. W. M. Howard, in his speech before Governor Stanton, advocating the commutation of the sentence of Leo M. Frank, made a statement so easily shown to be incorrect in its very essence when he said:

"On June 15, 1912, which was nine days before Governor Brown went out of office, he issued forty pardons." As a matter of fact, this was simply a ministerial act provided for by the law governing the parole of convicts. I will remember that several days before I retired from office the prison commission sent to me several dozen sets of papers referring to as many convicts who had been paroled by Governor Hoke Smith, Governor Stanton and myself. Quite a majority of the pardons had been granted by my two predecessors.

Section 1227 of volume 2 of the code of Georgia provides how paroled convicts may, after conducting themselves acceptably to the prison commission for at least twelve months, be granted full pardons.

The prison commission in each of the above cases reported that the paroled men had conducted themselves acceptably since the date of his parole by Governor Smith, Governor Stanton or myself, and recommended that he be now granted a full pardon as provided for by law.

Under these conditions I, of course, obeyed the intent of the parole law and followed the unbroken custom of the executive office in substituting pardons for paroles.

The men were already free. But what application, let me ask, does the above act have to the case of Leo M. Frank? Not one of the forty paroled men in question had been sentenced to death. The crimes they had committed had not caused either the jury or the trial judge to hold that they should suffer death.

The crime that Frank committed had caused both the jury and the trial judge to hold that death was the proper penalty for him. And two supreme courts have upheld the action of the trial court, the supreme court of Georgia distinctly saying: "We have given careful consideration of the evidence and we believe that the same is sufficient to uphold the verdict."

Respectfully,
JOSEPH M. BROWN.
Marietta, Ga., June 15, 1915.

ANDREWS TO INTRODUCE FLAG AND ROAD BILLS

Representative Would Have
Road Fund in Hands of Prison Commission

Walter P. Andrews, Fulton county representative elect, has announced two bills he will introduce in the coming session of the state legislature: one relating to the United States flag to be flown from every school house in the state throughout the school year; another creating a state highway commission and leading to the general improvement of roads throughout Georgia.

The flag bill, Mr. Andrews thinks, will be a great incentive to patriotism. His ideas along this line he expressed in a recent address at the Elks' flag day exercises in Marietta.

The road bill contemplates the placing of the general road fund derived from the automobile tax at the disposal of the prison commission for use in constructing highways in various parts of the state, the creation of a highway commission to decide where these roads shall be built, and the authorization of the state to accept from the federal government any money that may be given for road building.

Make it Easier For Baby in Summer

Many of the Hot-Weather
Troubles Can Easily
Be Avoided

If the mother will see to it that the bowels are kept regular, much of the illness to which children are most susceptible during hot weather can be prevented.

A mild laxative, administered at regular intervals, will prove an excellent preventive of summer complaints, and is caused by laxative herbs with peppermint, sold in drug stores under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is excellent for children, being pleasant to the taste, gentle yet positive in action, and free from opiate or narcotic drug of any description. It acts naturally, without griping or other discomforts, and is altogether dependable.

The cleansing of the bowels will most effectively check an attack of diarrhea by expelling the foreign matter and poisons that irritate and inflame the tissues.

HOWARD NEARS END OF HIS ARGUMENT FOR LEO M. FRANK

factory," he said, "it is shown by the record that they did not use the elevator. They entered the basement through the trap door on the first floor. It is established by the testimony of others, and by the testimony of Conley himself, that the elevator or its descent stopped itself flush with the first floor of the factory. Some witnesses testified how it shifted up with a slight thud. Others said the noise of the impact was scarcely perceptible. But all agreed that it struck flush against the floor."

"Now it is the testimony of Boots Rogers that when he went down the stairs for the first time on Monday, and this was the first time the elevator was used—the contact of the elevator with the bottom of the shaft caused or scattered the excrement, producing an odor which attracted his attention."

"Conley himself told the jury, tells you in this record, that he himself made this deposit in the elevator shaft Saturday morning. The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable, that the elevator was not used between the time the deposit was made and the time when Boots Rogers, Monday morning, went down on the elevator."

Solicitor Dorsey was on his feet. "These facts," he said, "are controverted. The elevator might have been stopped before it went all the way to the bottom of the shaft."

To this the governor observed that they were not to the factory on the recent visit the elevator chain was coated with rust, indicating that it was not but little as a means of controlling the elevator to cause a stop before the elevator reached the bottom."

HOWARD PRESSES POINT Attorney Howard pressed his point with great emphasis. He read Conley's testimony and from the testimony of Boots Rogers, to support his contention that the elevator stops itself automatically when it reaches the bottom of the shaft.

Coming now to the metaphysical features of the case, Attorney Howard read the testimony of Jim Conley relating to the preparation of the murder notes. He then quoted from the speech of Solicitor Dorsey in which the latter sought to fix guilt upon Frank by his deductions from these notes.

"The notes," said Mr. Howard, "are written mostly in monosyllables. The words are short. There are sixty-four of them. The average number of letters per word is 3.6. The Annie Maude Carter notes bear a striking resemblance to the murder notes. The solicitor emphasized the use of the word 'die' in the murder notes, which is very important, the solicitor contended, because the word was not one a negro would use and from this he attempted to show Frank's authorship. Now, your excellency, Conley's testimony before the jury shows that he used the word 'die' no less than sixty times. He used it also in the Annie Maude Carter notes and their significance."

"An examination of the Annie Maude Carter notes and the murder notes shows that he used the word 'die' to convey the same meaning. It being used instead of 'as if' in all these notes."

Governor Slaton here interrupted: "If you will pardon me, Mr. Howard, I would like for you to discuss the Annie Maude Carter notes and their significance."

TILT WITH DORSEY Mr. Dorsey, after a little tilt with Mr. Howard, stated that the evidence conceded the notes to be Conley's, but that the state showed they were obtained by fraud. Mr. Howard then gave the governor a brief history of the Annie Maude Carter notes.

Governor Slaton asked if there was anything in the record to show that anyone had dictated the Annie Maude Carter notes. Mr. Howard answered: "No, there is no attempt even to show that they were dictated."

Governor Slaton asked this question: "If Conley admitted writing these notes how could he deny writing the vulgar parts of them?"

Mr. Howard replied: "Oh, that could be done, your excellency. It is often done by the ostrich."

Mr. Howard then told the governor, asking him to read them and saying: "I will not read them aloud for these words will pollute the atmosphere of the Black Hole of Calcutta. I call your attention to them because they show the character of mind that would fit in with the crime at the porch the jury, since call your attention to the like use of words in these notes and in the murder notes. They show that the murder notes were written in Conley's own words and in his favorite words. The same mistakes of grammar are made in the series of notes and the same correct phrases are used in each. Conley says that Frank had him write four notes, and he says he wrote them in two minutes. You couldn't write four notes in that time."

HOW CONLEY GOT IDEA "I will now explain how Conley got the idea of charging that the notes were dictated."

"Before Conley had made any admission at all, the detectives time and time again dictated the very words of these notes to him and had forced him to write the very words. His passing through this experience must have given him the idea of charging that the notes were dictated."

At this point Governor Slaton said: "Mr. Howard, would you say that the words you have asked me to read would indicate perversion?"

Mr. Howard answered: "No, I would not. Burns or anyone else who contends that 'burns' doesn't know a negro."

Governor Slaton here adjourned the hearing until 2:30 o'clock in order to hear from a delegation from Newton county in connection with another matter.

true of the United States. We have a composite population—every nation of Europe having contributed liberally to our citizenship. These, our countrymen, themselves born abroad or immediately descended from foreign ancestors, cannot but take a lively interest in the conduct as well as in the results of the war and a still larger circle shared the concern of those directly connected. Not a soldier falls on either side but the sorrow expressed in his home finds an echo at some freeman in the United States."

Aside from sentimental considerations, Mr. Bryan asserts, neutral nations suffer serious disturbance because of the war.

"Nearly every neutral nation finds new domestic problems thrust upon it and old problems made more difficult," the statement declares. "No American citizen can note without deep concern the manner in which war questions have intruded themselves into our politics—overshadowing economic justice and stimulating agitation in favor of enlarged appropriations for military and naval purposes."

At some length Mr. Bryan refers to interruptions to neutral commerce, the rearrangement of business and consequent readjustments and speaks of scarcity of American ships as one of the greatest embarrassments to the United States. "The neutral nations are put to a great expense to preserve neutrality," continues the statement, "and are constantly in danger of being engaged in the war without intention or fault on their own part."

The rules of international law seem to have been made for the nations at peace. It is almost impossible to alter those rules during the war because of the material change, affecting as it would the neutral nations, and a violation of the law would be a seeming violation of neutrality.

"As soon as peace returns there will be a demand for an international conference on the subject. The presumption should then be given to peace, for peace is the normal condition. If nations are determined to fight, they should, as far as possible, bear the burden of the war and not permit it to transfer it to the nations which avoid war by resorting to reason instead of force."

Colonel Walter C. Hendrix, of Atlanta, Elected Great Sachem

At the main session of the convention of Georgia Red Men in the wigwag on Central avenue Wednesday, Canton, Ga., was chosen for the meeting place of the grand lodge in 1916. Mason was Captain's only rival in bidding for the convention.

Colonel Walter C. Hendrix, of Atlanta, was elected great sachem at the head of all Georgia Red Men for the ensuing year, succeeding J. R. Miller, of Marietta. The other officers elected were: J. M. Koon, of Augusta, great senior saganore; George E. Barrett, of Atlanta, great junior saganore; J. R. Miller, of Marietta, great prophet; M. J. Daniel, of Griffin, great keeper of records (re-elected); Judge George E. Johnson, of Atlanta, great keeper of wampum (re-elected).

Nine great representatives to the great council of the United States were elected. These were J. R. Miller, of Marietta; Charles Gillette, of Atlanta, and Sam J. Bell, of Jefferson. Charles Strother, of Milledgeville, held over for another year as a great representative.

Headed by their famous Atlanta drum and bugle corps which was ably rigged out in Indian costumes, war paint and feathers, 500 Red Men from all parts of Georgia in attendance upon the annual meeting of the state great council marched from the Ansley hotel Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock to the wigwag, 86 Central avenue, to hold the main business session of the convention.

Mayor James G. Woodward addressed the delegates, welcoming them to Atlanta in the name of the city. J. R. Miller, great sachem of Georgia, presided, and responded to the mayor's welcome. Great Troopmaster Frederick O. Downes, of Boston, the highest officer of all the Red Men of America, the honor guest of the occasion, then spoke. Mr. Downes arrived in Atlanta Tuesday afternoon. He spoke to a preliminary meeting of the Red Men Tuesday evening at the wigwag.

After exhibition team work at the wigwag Wednesday night a great ball, winding up the convention, will be held.

SLATON MAY NAME TWO NEW JUDGES THIS WEEK

Number Are Mentioned as Candidates to Succeed Reid and Daniel

Some time during the present week Governor Slaton is expected to name a new judge for the Flint circuit to succeed the late Judge Robert T. Daniel, and a new judge of the Stone Mountain circuit to succeed the late Judge Charles S. Reid.

Those who are mentioned for Judge Daniel's successor are O. H. B. Bloodworth, of Forsyth; J. F. Hedding, of Barnsville; J. J. Flynn, of Griffin; Judge T. E. Patterson, of Griffin; E. S. Williamson, of Forsyth, and W. E. H. Searey, Jr., of Griffin.

Those who are mentioned as candidates to succeed Judge Reid are Charles W. Smith, of Edgewood; James F. Rogers, of Covington, and J. J. Hunt, of Seale. A delegation of Mr. Covington's friends called at the governor's office Wednesday to urge his appointment.

Soon after Judge Reid's funeral Governor Slaton tendered the Stone Mountain judgeship to Colonel George M. Napier, the solicitor general of that circuit. Colonel Napier appreciated the honor, but declined on the ground that he felt that he could be of greater service by continuing as solicitor. Afterwards the governor tendered the place to Judge John S. Candler, of Atlanta, but Judge Candler also declined, his physicians having advised him that the duties of judge would be prejudicial to his health.

PRISON OFFICIALS TO HOLD MEETING HERE

Atlanta has been selected as the meeting place for the wardens and prison superintendents of Georgia, following a recent vote of members of the association. W. S. McCurey, warden of DeKalb county, has notified all members of the selected place and the date, July 6 and 7.

The first meeting will be held at the

THEATERS

The packed audiences that have attended the Forsyth theater for the first few performances this week will vouch for the meritorious quality of the bill, one of the best in many months. It is headlined by the inimitable Charlie Chaplin, supported by Anna Chance, in a roaring comedy, "Poughkeepsie," written by Grapevine himself—and by the Rigoletto Brothers, the most versatile pair of entertainers in vaudeville who make their first appearance upon an Atlanta stage. Other offerings are Dario, the accordionist; Morrissey and Hackett, presenting new novelties in song and dialogue; Ethel MacDonald, the Broadway song bird, with new songs and an elaborate wardrobe; Clark Keystone Trio, presenting the most competent of Charlie Chaplin entertainers, and a sure-fire brand of song and comedy, and Watson's Farmyard, an act that amuses the old and young from six to sixty.

"The Millionaire Baby," the Red Sellie release, distributed by the Vitaphone-Lubin-Selig-Deasany syndicate, is the alluring offering of the Grand theater for today only. The cast is an all-star one, and it, no doubt, will draw better audiences than any Sellie release of the season. Tomorrow only it will be succeeded by the stupendous Vitaphone production, "The Juggernaut," which created such a sensation a few weeks ago, and which has been booked for a second performance at staggering expense.

"Who's Who in Society," George Kleine's latest four-part comedy which visits the Strand theater Wednesday only, is a photo-play of many laughs and some melodramatic moments. A splendid cast furnishes amusement for sixty minutes through the medium of an unusually delightful story in which love, adventure and Dan Moyses are the conspicuous factors.

It is George Kleine's fourth consecutive comedy, following those charming farces, "Office 666," "Stop Thief" and "The Commuters," which have done so much to make the name Kleine synonymous with good comedy. "Who's Who" features a notable cast including Dan Moyses, Della Connor, Will H. Power, Edward Lester and Kate Sarantinos. The story is told in four parts, but the rapid action and many laughs make it seem more like two.

B. A. Rolfe presents for Thursday and Friday Vall Vall in the dramatic surprise, "The High Road."

Capital at 8:30 o'clock July 6. Through this organization, it is planned to exchange ideas, catch escaping prisoners, further plans and ideas for road building and in many ways help the work of the wardens and prison superintendents of the state.

ATLANTA DAY IS ASKED AT SAN FRANCISCO FAIR

Commissioners Requested to Set Aside July 19 or 20 as the Day

Monday, July 19, or Tuesday, July 20, will be Atlanta day at the Panama-Pacific exposition if the commissioners in charge of the exposition grant the request of Ivan E. Allen, president of the Atlanta convention bureau, asking that one of these days be set aside as such.

Mr. Allen has written the commissioners telling them that on these two days the Governor's Horse Guards, Yaarab temple of the Shrine and a large delegation of Atlanta citizens will be in San Francisco. The Porters Adair will head the Shrine and the Horse Guards will be in charge of Captain O. L. Rudisill.

Captain Rudisill has received a letter from R. E. Wells, director of special events, stating that the Horse Guards will be eagerly welcomed to the San Diego exposition and everything done to make their visit a success.

ANTI-JAPANESE MOVE IN CHINA PROTESTED

Japan is Reported to Have Sent Communication to Chinese Government

(By Associated Press.) TOKIO, June 16.—According to announcement made today by a Japanese news agency, Japan has sent a protest communication to the Chinese government in connection with the anti-Japanese movement in the republic. The protest of China with Japan's course during the negotiations culminating in acceptance of the Japanese ultimatum last month has been manifested principally by boycotts. A recent dispatch said British and Russian volunteers had dispersed riot anti-Japanese riot at Hankow for their own protection, and a message from Tokio late in May declared considerable uneasiness had been caused there by private reports that anti-Japanese agitation was spreading through south China.

COP SURE IT'S WHISKY AFTER TAKING A SNIFF

Acting Recorder Smith Has Evidence Tested Before Acting on Case

When Councilman Charles Whiteford Smith sits on the city recorder's bench he is going to be sure a spade's a spade before he calls it a spade. In the absence of Judge Johnson Wednesday morning—Judge Johnson being busy as chairman of the reception committee welcoming some 200 Georgia Red Men—Councilman Smith presided. The case was a charge of selling whisky against Rachel Chambers, colored. Officer Gub Davis, who made the arrest, exhibited a bottle plainly labeled "Wildcat Corn," found in Rachel's possession. Judge Smith eyed the bottle and said: "Are you sure that's whisky?" "That's what it says," replied the officer. "Have you tasted it?" asked the judge. "No," said the officer. "Well, take a good long sniff." ordered the judge, and only after Officer Davis had convinced himself by a fragrant sniff that it was indeed whisky, did Judge Smith bind over the prisoner.

STATE WILL PAY OUT BIG SUM NEXT MONTH

State Treasurer W. J. Speer was scratching his head Wednesday, wondering how the state would be able to meet the financial demand which would be made on the treasury in July.

He estimates that during that month $75,000 will be needed for expenses of the legislature, and also in July the state must pay $140,000 into the interest fund. Then there will be the regular fixed expenses of the state house departments and the various state institutions to meet.

GAME COMMISSIONER WANTS TO USE FUNDS

State Game Commissioner Charles L. Smith is of the opinion that the funds derived from the sale of game licenses and fines paid by persons convicted of violating the game law should be available for enlarging the scope and work of the department, and he will probably make such a recommendation to the general assembly.

Under the present law all funds collected by the department in excess of what are required for the absolute maintenance of the department must be turned into the state treasury to become a part of the common school fund. The first year the department was conducted $19,000 was turned into the treasury and last year $12,000 was turned in.

These rules will be considered at the hearing of the commission on July 13, after which the commission will adopt and publish the rules which will be binding upon the jitneys.

WILL ENLARGE SEWERS IN SEVERAL SECTIONS

Following complaints of citizens that the recent heavy rains have again demonstrated that sewers in several sections are not large enough to carry away large quantities of water, the sewer committee of council Tuesday afternoon began the formulation of plans for the enlargement of several sewers.

Although the members of the committee agreed that only a bond issue can give real relief, it was decided to urge council to enlarge the sewer on Alabama street between Whitehall and Broad, and to enlarge the Plum street sewer.

Well, will history repeat itself on June 13?

Germany has changed her tune to one of a less martial character.

Mr. Bryan should remember that the longer a man is out of office the less his "statements" are read.

The Italian Advance.

The capture of Montefalco places the Italian army within fifteen miles of Trieste, Austria's principal seaport and the main point of vantage in the Adriatic campaign. That the invaders encountered so feeble a resistance is explained only on the ground that the Austrians are employing all available forces for the still wavering contest in Galicia. The Russian rally around Lemberg evidently has checked the Teutons' great drive, and for a time at least, prevents them from withdrawing any considerable number of troops for other fields. Italy meanwhile is making the most of her enemy's strain.

Montefalco commands the light and water supply of Trieste and also an important railway junction. Its strategic value is thus far-reaching. It is not expected, however, Trieste itself will yield without a hardy and stubborn defense. It is well fortified and presumably well garrisoned. The Austrians may have decided, as a matter of economy, to spare their strength for this stronghold, though in the interim they have sacrificed much to the enemy. If the renewed vigor of the Russians in Galicia is sustained and the Teutons, being thus occupied in that region, are unable to release troops for the Adriatic country, the Italian advance is likely to continue with marked advantage to the broad interests of the Allies. Italy is moving not only southward towards Trieste but also northward in the Trentino, where her progress though not so rapid is none the less steady. The exposed border of the Teutonic empire is continually increasing and the pressure upon their resources is growing greater and greater. The definite results of this situation are not yet in view, but it would seem that they are inexorably taking shape.

When is war not war? When the enemy does it.

The candidates for 1915 have been interned, so to speak.

History shows that England always hobs up severely after being conquered, and is almost improved by the process. It has been a long time now since one of these conquests; if one should occur, it might change the government and ruling family of England, and infuse the new blood of a more vigorous race into the nation's veins, but England would still be England.

Spanish in High Schools.

"Spanish is the most useful of all languages, outside of pure English itself, to the North American of today. German and French are well enough, but it is to Central and South America that we look most naturally for the expansion of our export trade. To the south of us, extend the untimely borders of our national borders to the Straits of Magellan. In rich, potential countries of Spanish tongue, every one of them eager to buy in the United States in preference to Germany or England. It took the war to show us this. Now the question intrudes, are we as a nation going to avail ourselves of our opportunity?"

This comment by the New York Commercial cogently states the importance of Spanish from the standpoint of the country's business interest. If our merchants and manufacturers are to develop their opportunities in Latin-American markets, they must be able to deal in terms of Latin-American thought and speech. The simplest details of commercial transactions will require a working knowledge of Spanish. These conditions open a broad field of service for our educational institutions, especially the high schools. Ability to read and write and speak Spanish with ease will be worth more and more to young men just entering business, and also to the business in which they are engaged. It is noteworthy that the high schools of Argentina, Chile and Peru are now offering courses in English. The high schools of the United States need not be less prompt and progressive in meeting the needs of the time.

The Germans are getting the English habit of predicting such and such a victory on a certain date.

The great modern naval problem is to find the necessary protection for battleships which can't be safely bottled up.

The best thing said on the recent Franco-Anglo-Slav-Dago-Turco-Teutonic war was published in a Jap paper. The Germans had just captured 140,000 Russians. "It's not war," said the Jap, "it's imperialism."

The Two Issues.

As the one great nation not at war, the United States owes an especial duty to the world as well as to itself to safeguard and uphold the sea rights of neutrals wherever and by whomsoever those rights are transgressed. Upon the wisdom and staunchness with which our Government acts in this issue, depend not only the immediate interests of our own people but also the integrity of principles that are essential to the well-being of all peoples and all times. If the property and life of neutrals are not to be respected, then international law becomes a dead letter and civilization itself is in peril. If the seas are not to be safe for neutral travelers and open to neutral trade, then there will be no such thing as neutral rights.

The destruction of the Lusitania and the seizure of American merchantmen bound for peaceful ports are both violations of neutral rights, and must be dealt with accordingly. It is important, however, that each case be treated on its own merits, and that the graver offense first be given attention. It is one thing for Great Britain to seize and detain a cargo of American merchandise. It is quite a different thing for Germany to torpedo an unarmed passenger ship and, without warning or provocation, send more than a hundred American lives to instant death. It is important that our Government protect its citizens' commerce, but it is infinitely more important that it protect their lives.

As human rights are above property rights, so the case against Germany should take precedence over that against England and her allies. However unjust in some respects the British Order in Council may be, it does not endanger the life of neutrals and noncombatants as does Germany's submarine anarchy. A cargo can be paid for, but a life blotted out is beyond reparation. Naturally, therefore, the President has dealt first with the Lusitania incident and is concerned most earnestly in securing guarantees that such an outrage shall not be repeated.

This does not imply, however, that British infringements on America's commercial rights will be or have been overlooked. In due time and by proper means that problem will be handled. But it will be handled on its own merits. It will not be confused with the German affair. Our government stands ready to mediate in any proper manner between London and Berlin, but in asserting its own right it proceeds independently of either. Germany cannot escape responsibility by pleading a British blockade of her food imports, any more than Great Britain can escape responsibility by pleading the German submarine crimes. The United States cannot control either of the belligerents in its conduct toward the other; it can insist only that they both respect the rights of the United States.

The country may well trust the Administration to meet all issues concerning America's sea rights with foresight and firmness. It may trust the President to act with due promptness and full justice. And the country may well afford to be patient concerning matters of property while matters of humanity are in the balance.

It seldom pays to think unless you intend to act.

Tree Planting.

"Tree planting," says the Louisville Courier-Journal, "is a matter far too important to be left to individual initiative, or left undone where individuals do not care to assume the expense involved." To this point of view, alert municipalities are fast coming. A number of American cities have established forestry departments which not only attend to the planting of trees on thoroughfares and in parks but also supervise the pruning and general care of trees throughout the community. The expenditures required for this service are returned a thousand fold in benefits to the common interest. Trees are a public blessing, almost as much so as sunlight and air. They contribute to the community's pleasure and well-being as surely as to that of their owners. They increase property values, they make for health and comfort, and in their beauty alone are of priceless civic value. The city, therefore, cannot afford to trust so vital an asset to ignorance and indifference. Certainly, it should not neglect to provide skilled and constant care for the trees along thoroughfares and on other public places. No province of natural conservation is more important than this, and forward-looking cities are giving it more and more generous attention.

Discoveries of new wrinkles are not popular with ladies.

Editorial Echoes

An Oklahoma man laid violent hands on his wife because she gave him ham, eggs and toast for breakfast, although he had commanded her to cook pancakes. The Judge, a Daniel come to Judgment, fined him $25 and costs, taking judicial notice that ham and eggs with toast is a competent and savory breakfast, and memorably ruling that a married man's dominion and authority does not reach into the kitchen; which by necessary inference is not a bed in a carte. Sound if not kind doctrine. In the matter of food the person bonded in matrimony must take heed of what he can get and disabuse himself of the fantasy that the dining room is a restaurant.—New York Sun.

Storehouse of the Mind.

BY R. ADDINGTON BRIDGES
Author of "The Case of Personality," "Psychology and Parenthood," etc.
I have been asked by a correspondent to explain just what psychologists mean when they speak of "the subconscious." My inquirer writes:
"We hear much nowadays of the subconscious and of its mystical power. We are told that it transcends ordinary consciousness. I do not understand what is meant by this, and I know a good many other people are puzzled by it."
Stated as briefly as possible, the subconscious may be described as that region of the human mind in which are stored memories acquired by previous experience, education, and observation.
This includes memories of sights and sounds which were perceived without our being aware of them at the time we perceived them.
Let them come within range of eye and ear, even when we are paying attention to something else, and the delicate mechanism of these sense organs registers a definite memory-image of them in our mind.
Such images, together with all our other memory-images, no matter how acquired, remain our permanent possession.
We are able to recall by voluntary effort only a comparatively few of our innumerable memory-images. But repeated experience, as well as facts of common knowledge, serve to indicate that under certain conditions any experience that we have ever had can be recalled by us. As one psychologist puts it:
"What has gone into the mind can come out of the mind."
Obviously there must be a region of the mind where these multitudinous memory-images are stored. It is to this region that psychologists refer when they use the term, "the subconscious."
But the subconscious is not only a reservoir for the storage of memory-images. It is also a workshop for their manipulation, so that on occasion they may emerge, not simply as they went in but in pleasing and often remarkable combinations.
This function of the subconscious is exemplified in many ways, from the picturesque and vivid dreams of "night visions" to the most subtle and elusive of its hidden depths. It would seem, the mind is perpetually active. It is not content to hold its memory-images in inert form. It must fuse and collate them, these are the facts of the subconscious working for the most closely linked together in a network of associated ideas.
That is why one man's subconscious is more serviceable to him than another's.
Through conscious study and reflection he has packed the secret chambers of his mind with a mass of memory-images relating to one specific subject or subjects, hence naturally linked by association of ideas. And just because he consciously focuses his attention in this way, he is able to bring up at will, in the subconscious, the material he has so carefully packed. It is simply a convenient term to designate one phase of our mental life.

A Subsidy That Fails

At a time when every consideration of national welfare demands the extension of our merchant marine, it is to be crippled by the provisions of the new Seamen's law which takes effect in November. The authors of the measure, which contains some excellent provisions for the benefit of the seaman, have placed in the hands of the Seamen's union the management of shipping.
Last week the Robert Dollar Steamship company announced its intention of withdrawing from the Pacific Mail company follows suit. With these corporations dissolved, the American flag practically disappears from the Pacific, and the Japanese, who are to be the chief victims of the legislation, will acquire a monopoly of the carrying trade between the Orient and this country.
Although some obstacles in the way of a revival of our merchant marine have been removed by the ship-repair bill and a more liberal tariff, the question of sailors' wages has made operation very costly. In the Pacific service most sailors have been Chinese and Japanese. To get rid of them and compel the employment of Americans we now have restrictions as to language, experience, conduct, and shipboard behavior. The men to be employed which amount to a revolution of practices so far as Americans are concerned.
That is why the laboring man does not work. It is worse in many respects than a subsidy to capital, for it throttles both labor and capital.—New York World.

Title To the Bullet

A case of curious interest is reported to have recently been decided by a German court. A wounded soldier brought suit against the surgeon who had failed to recover possession of the bullet that had struck him under the doctor's care. Claims on both sides were set out and the court determined the bullet belonged to the soldier.
Who will deny that in this decision the court has not followed the rule of common sense as applied to property rights? The title to the bullet originally resided in the enemy nation. This owner voluntarily relinquished its rights when the bullet was spent upon its flight, and it is therefore at large, conveyed title to the same to its recipient. The doctor, of course, may set up some show of title under the doctrine of treasure trove, but the owner of the property, the doctor, the treasure was located set up immediate claim to it, the doctor would seem to be entitled only to receive reward as he might reasonably claim from the owner of the property. In the end the enemy nation may bring suit to recover possession of the bullet, alleging that it was not intended that that should pass into the hands of the doctor. The title should pass to the man who shot it, the man who fired the bullet. The title to the bullet may be followed by those who have the time.—Omaha Bee.

"Flanders"

Under the lee of the little woods
I'm sitting in the sun.
What will be done in Flanders
Before the day is done?
Under my feet the springing blades
Are green as green can be;
It's the bloody clay of Flanders
That keeps them green for me.
Above beyond the larches
The sky is very blue;
It's the smoke of hell in Flanders
That leaves the sun, for me.
By nests in the blossoming elm tree
The wise rooks rock on bough.
What blasts of hell in Flanders
Rive the bare branches now?
—London Times.

Quips and Quiddities

"There was Nelson killed!" a London teacher asked a London schoolboy.
"Traveller Square," the boy answered.
Indeed! said the teacher, sarcastically. "And I suppose that Wellington was killed at Waterloo station?"
"No, ma'am," said the boy. "That was Napoleon you're thinking of!"
Even members of the family had to look twice to be sure as to "who was who" of the twins.
But they were not different colors, hair ribbons or even until the day when grandma, coming into the living room, said to the little person looking out of the window, "Is it Josie or Rosie?" And she replied, "I think it's Josie."

FALSE TREASURES

A MIDDLE-aged gentleman with an air of conscious importance came to the geological department of the national museum at Washington recently, and demanded an interview with the "head man." When he was alone with the director, he delved into the tall pocket of his frock coat, and produced a number of little newspaper packages. As he eagerly unwrapped a lot of pebbles and laid them before the director, the geologist made a deep search across the face of the packages and then he said to the gentleman who he had found upon his farm in Indiana; that he thought it an opportune time to put them upon the market now that European importations of gems were out of, and that he wanted an expert opinion as to their value.
A single glance at the stones assured the geologist that they were valueless bits of quartz, although several of them had an unusually high luster; but the old farmer was not willing to accept a decision which shattered his dreams of millions at a single blow. He had been told that his stones were diamonds in the rough, and had taught himself to believe it. When the geologist had finished his examination of the face of the brightest stone with his knife he was still unconvinced. A fragment crushed to show the difference between its shelly fragments and the straight cleavage of a diamond also failed.
Finally the specific gravity balance in the laboratory, verified by the statement of a big scientific man, finally convinced him of his error, and he left the museum sadly disillusioned. This man had spent a lifetime in the search for a valuable stone, and he returned home without purchasing any of the presents for his family which he had planned to get with the proceeds from the sale of the first stone.

This incident is typical of almost daily happenings at the national museum, except that most persons are willing to trust their treasures to the mail. In every part of the country men and women seem obsessed with the idea that mineral wealth lies practically under their feet, and delude themselves into a belief that the discovery of a geological treasure upon the laboratory table, or returned home without purchasing any of the presents for his family which he had planned to get with the proceeds from the sale of the first stone.
The interest in radium production, which has developed in this country since the war, has been intensified by the war. All sorts of peculiar looking stones are being sent in with the hope that they may contain the most precious substance upon earth. Few people outside of geological circles have any idea of the appearance of radium. A piece of black coal-like stone will be taken for pitch-blende, while almost any stone having a yellowish cast may be recognized as carnotite by some hopeful radium hunter. Scientists are as yet unaware of any radium deposits of commercial value in this country except in the Colorado and Utah. But the activity of private individuals engaged upon the quest for radium is adding considerably to the work of the museum. Occasionally, ores are sent in, which contain a small percentage of radium, but which it would be sufficient to warrant the expense of development is not a matter these scientists can decide.

A unique machine has been devised at the museum for the examination of stones supposed to contain radium. It includes two connected brass boxes. The upper box contains a small amount of radium, and is attached to a strip of aluminum foil. The ore to be tested is placed in the lower box, and both are made airtight. If the ore contains radioactivity, the rays will raise the strip of foil. The height to which it is raised is accurately noted through a glass plate in the side of the box. The ore is then removed, and the height of the foil is noted. The rays of the ore, although photographic tests are sometimes made in addition.

THE SILENCES

BY DR. FRANK GRANT
I went down to the seashore, and after long watching and dreaming I fancied it was given me to understand the voice of the waters.
"You wonder why you do not talk to me. We are talking ever and forever; but you have never, till now, been still enough to listen."
"The three voices, that of Nature, that of God, and that of the human mind, never perfectly heard except at the bottom of the funnel of silence."
"There are few of your race who understand solitude. The noise of the world is always in their ears, and the signals that are wis-wagged to winds by waving trees, and the color-ideas that are spelled to them by flowers and birds, are always in their ears. You wonder why you cannot comprehend bird talk, as people do in fairy stories. You speculate as to whether monkeys communicate real ideas by their chatter, whether the conversation of the hen-cackles are mere noise or have intelligent contents."
"Your difficulty lies in that you do not realize the extent, the range of ideas. You are saturated with sounds of too high and others of too low vibration for the human ear to perceive. You know also that the colors perceptible to the human eye are comparatively few; that there are colors beyond violet and ultraviolet, and that are too subtle for the eye."
"It is precisely so with thoughts, or vibrations. There is a whole world of ideas too simple for you to grasp, and another world of ideas too complex for you to grasp. Human beings think only a few notes in the music of the universe. The rest is beyond them. You can only hint at our meanings, mine and the world's."
"We speak of the deep, voiceless intricacies of the meaning of the matter with you," he said. "I have called you 'the matter with you.' You have gone crazy."
"Only partly," I answered. "Tell me why we are accounted sane only so long as we keep to the traditions of the ordinary and the common. The truth of poetry, religion, or nature until we overstep the limits? Is all greatness madness?"
"Ours," he returned, "is madness; and yet we call it a matter and measured the human head for a living!"

DIARY OF A SOLDIER IN THE TRENCHES

BY JEAN GIGOT, as Recorded by Walter S. Hiett.
IN THE TRENCHES, April 23.—We spent several days of our rest in the home of an old peasant woman on her farm near Pernant, back of our trenches. It was very cold for the season and we were quite depressed. We went about as if dreaming, wondering how we had ever lived through those terrible eight days in the trenches.
All our time was spent in eating, sleeping, and cleaning the everlasting mud from our bodies and clothes. That time the mud was in our hair, in our ears, rubbed into our eyelashes, our very caps were shapeless pieces of clay.
The men of my company section wanted to sleep in the barn, on some pitifully small heaps of straw we gathered in the fields. But the old peasant woman, who was living in the farm house, insisted that our cook set up his gear in her kitchen and that as many of us as possible sleep in her house.
I was to see the old woman, you are company and she explained, "You will see my boys while you are here." So she made us sit and warm our chilled bones beside her delicious fire.
She was called to her bed when we were feeling Germans passed that way, many months before. In great haste, an officer put a pistol on either side of her head and demanded to know if any French soldiers had passed the night before him. She threatened to shoot her if she lied, and her little grandchildren, too, of course she lied, but the fright of the moment convinced her of the truth. With her arms raised and an invalid. Her grandchildren had all gone away, but she refused to leave the farm.
The war began in the year of 1870, and I will see through this one, too," she declared. "They killed my husband, put me up against the wall there, and they can do to me what they please."
I helped to put things right about the house, as much as I could, for a shell or two had struck it. The German soldiers had looted it, smashed her dishes, broken her furniture.
How she hated the Germans!
At each sound of the cannon that shook the house she was living the life of a ghost. "Was that ours?" and I said, "Yes," always, even when she knew it had been a German cannon that had rattled her poor home.
To humer her, I told her that we were on our way to the German frontier. "You will do the same to them," she made me promise, "even as they had done to us." After we have looked on such hopeless devastation, will we be able to restrain ourselves?

We went back to the trenches, wondering if we would ever return. When we said good-bye to the old woman, whom we had begun to call "Grandmother," some of us wanted to kiss her wrinkled cheeks, thinking all the while of our women at home.
"Take care of yourselves, my boys," she admonished us, "but be sure to kiss them all."
Lastly we were in the line of trenches north of Soissons, occupying a little wood with the German trenches just outside of it, in front of us. The wood was taken from the Germans by the bayonet charge of the African troops, the Turcos, after the Germans had been bombarded and massacred by our artillery.
There were hundreds of bodies all about us, with their polished bayonets scattered here and there. We were literally living among the dead, among hideous, foul-smelling, rotting bodies, with worms creeping over their faces, eating the brains and the eyes. The uniforms that once decked men who proudly said they were fighting for their country. How vain, how pitiful, a thing is a word!
Every day at night, when there were no attacks, at the risks of ourselves being potted and left to join this horrible band, we crept out, like so many gnats on our hands and knees and buried a few of these unfortunates.
We always took their plate numbers to send home some day, and their families might learn where their loved ones were dead. With our own courage, none too great as it was, because of our life of physical fatigue and mental depression, we often despaired of ever finishing the work.
There were so many dead! Out on the plain by daylight I could see other poor French and German soldiers lying in rows, as if they were a hundred where death surprised them.
What a spectacle at night was this field of many bodies! The moon was shining brightly and the lulls we had time to think of what was going on about us! Sometimes we ourselves became as savage beasts. We took the guns and cartridges that were found in great stacks about the dead, and we ate on the living Germans. Was it not a rare revenge to kill more Germans, hypocritical Boches, with their own arms?

TODAY'S EVENING STORY

IRISH HEARTS

(Copyright, 1915, by W. W. Warner.)

AND where is herself this evening?" asked Hugh Sheehan, grimly. "Are we not to have the pleasure of my lady's company at dinner?"

"Leave her alone, Hughie," said his wife. "She may have a headache. I'll take her a cup of tea after we're all served."

"I'll have none of her sulking," said Judith's father. "She'll come to dinner or I'll know why."

"Wait, here I am," said the voice of his daughter, back of him, a voice as grim as his own.

"In three minutes I was coming after you," said Hugh Sheehan. "It's just as well."

"Forget it, dad," his son said, breaking silence for the first time in the meal. "Leave her alone; she's done nothing."

"May I have something to eat now that I've come to the table?" asked Judy, dangerously. Hugh Sheehan served her silently, and her mother came in from the kitchen, carrying a cup of tea. She put it down beside her daughter, resting her hand for a moment on the girl's shoulder. Judy's eyes filled and she covered the rough hand with her own. "I'm all right, mother," she said gently. "Don't you bother."

In spite of her attempted cheerfulness the meal was stiff, uncomfortable. Ed shuffled restlessly.

"For heaven's sake," he said in disgust. "You act like a morose. This ain't a funeral. Cheer up."

Hugh's temper hung by a hair at all times. "And why should we not act like a funeral?" he asked, darting a glance at Judy, where she sat silently, her heavily fringed gray eyes lowered to her plate. "Is it every day that the man that jilted your sister gets married?"

"Hugh!" cried Mrs. Sheehan, in blank dismay.

Judy's cup clattered against the saucer and she turned to her father, her face white with anger. "Listen to me, Hugh Sheehan," she said, "while I tell you what I thought was going to die with me—the reason Jack Fogarty jilted me!"

Hugh stared at her aghast; he had not heard that tone in a woman's voice since he heard his mother raise the keener over his father back in County Mayo forty years before. "May the saints forgive me for what I'm going to say, but I'd say it now if I was to be struck dead for it the next minute!"

"I'd be in the church tonight but for Jack Fogarty would be putting the ring on my hand if you weren't my father. Six months ago I was Saturday night home from a dance, you may remember. It was the last time I ever went to with Jack, so you can't well have forgotten it. We came in and you were in the parlor. You may not remember how you acted—I don't expect you to, for you were in no condition to remember anything. But after I got to remember anything, that he didn't dare marry me; that his own father had as it was a devil all his life. And he didn't dare risk marrying me for the sake of the children that might have come to us. This is plain speaking, but I'll say it all out for once."

"Jack Fogarty wouldn't marry me because my father was a drunkard, and afterward, when he begged to come back, I wouldn't forgive him for what he'd said of you. From this day on I'll hear more about my not marrying. Would you have me say to the boys: 'Come and see me some night. I'm not telling whether my father will be drunk or sober, but you can try your luck.' I'll not do it. And what's more, Hugh Sheehan, the next time you come home drunk I leave the house and I'll not return."

She was standing when she finished, her feet on the table. For a moment Jack looked back at her with glassed, pathetic eyes. Then she turned away. "I'm sorry, mother," she said. "I'd stood all I could from him for many a day."

She left the room quietly. The three at the table sat looking at each other blankly.

"Finally Ed spoke. 'You had it coming to you, dad,' he said. 'You've not let her alone on the subject since you heard that Jack Fogarty was going to marry Mame Martin.'"

Mrs. Sheehan came around to her husband and laid her cheek against his. "Don't you be worrying, Hughie, dear," she said. "She'll be herself again in the morning; she's been under an awful strain today; and you ought not to have spoken so."

"They heard Judith come downstairs and pause in the front hall. 'I'm going out, mother,' she said, and her voice was as cool and smooth as water. 'Don't worry. I'll be back soon.' And she was gone, the heavy door echoing behind her."

Outside Judy walked to Dearborn. Her first impulse had been to go to confession, but the thought of facing the gentle father while she was yet unrepentant, with anger toward her father still in her heart, was repugnant. She knew herself well enough to know that the repentance would overtake her before the evening closed. She walked slowly north to the park.

The night was warm and pleasant and Lincoln park was crowded. She had no desire to go near the lake, only to stay in the cool dark trees. But every bench was occupied. Finally she chose one with only one occupant, a man with his hands in his pockets and hat pulled over his eyes. She sat there quietly, watching the lights of the passing machines flash by.

She felt dull, listless and hopeless, a somehow, heart-broken. The man at the other end of the bench depressed her, he was so obviously depressed, too. Suddenly he sat up and pushed his hat back. She could feel him looking at her. He spoke.

"Good evening, Judy Sheehan," he said, using the full name, as an Irishman often does.

Judith turned to him quickly, although the voice had already told her who he was. "Good evening to you, Kevin O'Connell," she said, falling naturally into the same style of address.

He moved over beside her. Judith felt as if her heart had stopped aching and was resting for the first time in months.

"Kevin O'Connell, lame, retiring, had the gift that comes to few men of watching and hearing the deepest wounds."

"You look tired," he said frankly. Judy looked at him with wondering how much he knew. Surely every one in her small world was talking tonight to him. Jack Fogarty, who had been so wild about Judy Sheehan, was that night marrying Mame Martin. If Kevin O'Connell could have seen her...

"I am tired," she said and felt as if a heavy hand had been lifted. They sat quietly for a while.

"Could you tell me about it, Judy?" he asked, speaking. "I'm more like a father or something," Kevin said.

"It is like a father," Judy agreed. "I've sometimes wondered why you never became a priest, Kevin."

Kevin drew a quick breath and looked away. "It's because I'm a fool, I guess," he said. "I know a woman would look at a lame man, but I keep wanting a home and a wife and children." His voice was vibrant with a note that no one else had ever heard there, and Judy responded to the note as she had never before responded to any man's voice. "I'd never be contented as a priest, beautiful as the life is. And there you have it."

Silence fell between them. Judy forgot her own trouble and sympathized with Kevin. For the first time she realized his Irish pride, the pride that had kept her going for months. It was that that had made him a recluse. Kevin thought his trifling little sin him of from marriage!

"Kav," she said at last softly, "per-

A Mother's Hand

A mother's hand with its tenderness its caressing, smoothing, soothing, rummaging of warmth after cold, of comfort after privation, of happiness after pain, with its melodious rhythmic movement which lulls and soothes the troubled child, is the incomparable instrument of the corporal expression of life; her hand strokes the child as if the whole service of the parent's age had been to shape and perfect it as an instrument of maternal love, as if the great artist Time had bent over it, thought over it, toiled over it, planned, modeled, devised and imagined, till with the ripeness of perfection, he had rested content—Henry Dwight Sedwick in the Yale Review.

OPERATORS SMILE AS THEY READ IT
From One End of United States to Other—Joke That Really Is No Joke

The following joke, which is by no means all a joke, appeared in a recent issue of the Telegraph & Telephone Age, published in New York City: "An operator in Nashville, Tenn., instead of spending his good money in purchasing a transmitting device, bought a bottle of what is known as Vitalitas, and, according to a newspaper report, after taking a dose of the medicine all the operators on his wire break in to inquire what he has done to increase his speed."
The operator in question is Mr. Elam Conners, of 1311 Shelby avenue, Nashville, with the Postal Telegraph Company of that city. The article which inspired the squib in the Telegraph & Telephone Age was the following interview with Mr. Conners, which was published in several papers: "All the operators want to know what I have done to increase my speed on the instrument; I sure make them hustle now. When I take a dose of Vitalitas, I am on my third bottle, and it has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken. I make this statement for my friends whom I want to help. Vitalitas is attracting world-wide attention. It is Nature's greatest tonic and corrective and is bringing new health to people in all walks of life who suffer with indigestion, nervous debility, rheumatism and other ills. Do not delay. See Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Vitalitas at Jacobs' Pharmacy, or write there for information.—(Adv.)"

A wealth of garden flowers decorated the spacious rooms and the buffet tables were placed on the wide porches and in the dining room. Mrs. Adair received wearing a pretty lingerie gown of white, embroidered in black, and Miss Rowland was gowned in white and black voile. Mrs. Robert Grege, who assisted in entertaining, wore a lovely summer toilet of white lace.

Francis Outmet Ties Thompson In Medal Score

Amateur Champion and Philadelphia Professional Each Turn in Cards of 151 in Qualifying Round for National Open Title-Other Stars to Qualify Today

SHORT HILLS, N. J., June 16.—Francis Outmet, national amateur champion, divided honors in the first qualifying round for this year's open title with James Thompson, the Philadelphia professional, at the Baltusrol golf club today.

Thompson, during both rounds, found his ball in traps and bunkers, but he made some wonderful recoveries.

Three other well-qualified Tuesday. These were Oswald Kirkby, of Englewood, former metropolitan and professional; Charles Evans, John G. Marston, who won the New Jersey title last year; and Alex. Arthur Topping, of Greenwich, Conn., runner-up in the French championship last year.

George Low, of the local club; George McLean, of Philadelphia, and Clarence McLean, of Atlantic City, led the other professionals with 151 each. Alex. Smith, Wyckoff, N. Y., and George Sargent, Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C., two former holders of the open title, tied with 152 each. Alex. Arthur of Westbury, Mass., failed to qualify by one stroke, his total being 152.

The best score for eighteen holes made during the day's play was 73, Outmet, Macdonald, Sargent and McLean being the players.

Eastern Crews To Row Westerners
SEATTLE, June 16.—Assurance that the Victory crews of Harvard and other Cornell or Pennsylvania will come here to compete at the University of Washington during the Shriner convention, July 15 to 17, have been received by Hiram Condit, the University of Washington coach, it was announced today.

The Harvard eight has signified its intention of paying its own expenses for the trip, while Pennsylvania and Cornell indicate that they will come if expenses are paid. Thirty Shriners are guaranteed to come to defeat these and other expenses of the regatta.

Western Golf Clubs Compete for Trophy
CHICAGO, June 16.—Sixty-one clubs of the Western Golf association competed today in the seventh annual play for the Tom Morris Memorial trophy. The trophy was presented by Peter Mitchell, of Glenview, Ill., as a memorial to the "grand old man of golf" who, for many years, presided over the historic Glenview course. The teams played against pair of their respective courses.

Woodland Country club won the trophy last year. Los Angeles Country club was the winner in 1913 and the previous year.

THE BLIGHTED.
This is a yarn of the blighted sons, Thrust from contentment's fold; Lawyers who gather in fabled fees; Merchants who dabble in gold; Men who have come to renown and fame; Who yet dwell under a pall; For in spite of wealth and the rest of it, They can't keep an eye on the ball.

THIS IS A YARN OF THE SUFFERING SONS
Whose place should be in the game; Who yet walk around with a basketball look And a curse for their unkempt fate; For what is wealth or a deep renown, What is the worth of it all; When a bloke walks up to mashie shot And can't keep his eye on the ball?

Golf isn't the only pastime that requires the ability to fix one's orb on the sphere involved. Ask Ty Cobb the two main ingredients of good batting, and he will tell you they are to keep an eye eternally fixed on that ball and to start the arms in the swing ahead of the body, bringing the body in, to add extra power to the blow.

MILAN'S RECORD.
Clyde Milan, of Washington, holds the modern base-stealing record, with eighty-eight thefts acquired back in 1912.

But this record is almost sure to fade out unless Ty Cobb drops a leg somewhere between now and October. Cobb to date has collected thirty-nine steals in fifty-four games. At this same impetus he will lay in a supply of pilfered bases well over one hundred, which, if completed, will make him the best young men to shoot at for a number of spy campaigns on beyond.

To appreciate Cobb's super-human base running, one has only to use these excellent statistics for a foundation of comparative dope. The two fastest people in the American league are Bert Shotton and Fritz Malsel. Both are batting only a shade under .300, which is a pretty good record. Cobb has stolen exactly as many bases as Shotton and Malsel together—thirty-nine—and Shotton and Malsel are ranked among the base-running stars of the commonwealth.

Among others endowed with speed and the batting eye, Cobb has stolen more bases than Collins, Speaker, Jackson, Milan and Strunk all put together—and only one less than the combined steals of the three leading base runners in the National. Which is fair evidence as to why Ty Cobb is ranked as a pretty fair runner of baseball field, take him at his average stuff.

"More hard luck for President Wilson." Hard luck? To have Bryan on the opposite side is the greatest luck the world ever awarded him. The best of all the luck of luck would win a world championship for the Reds or Browns.

Which recalls the fact that Branch Rickey and his Browns have drawn more tough luck this season than any club in the business. With a fair share of fortune, the stuff is there to give trouble to even those around the top.

AT BALTIMORE.
Those lucky enough to foregather at Baltusrol this week and patter along in the wake of Outmet, Hagen, Evans, Nichols, etc., will observe various grips, various stances and various ways of propelling a golf ball toward the cup.

They will observe no set standard of form or style; but they will observe three essential things: the look at the ball; a perfected timing that finds arms and body working in perfect team play and iron play wrought with a crisp, businesslike stroke where the wrist is a predominant factor. And by watching these essentials more than one helpful aid can be stored away for future practice.

THE T. C. OF THE N. L.
Is Colonel Jack Daubert the Ty Cobb of the National League? Evidence is beginning to point very strongly in that direction. Jack has collected thirty-nine steals in fifty-four games. And today he is 30 points beyond any rival, with an average of .384.

But there is this difference on offense—where Cobb has scored sixty runs and stolen thirty-nine bases, Daubert has scored sixty runs and stolen five bases. Which is hardly what one might label as nip and tuck in the way of comparative stardom.

MGRAND REJOINDER.
I have a bunch of hitters who are waiting for the call— I have a bunch of pitchers who are waiting for the call. But I haven't got a pitcher with as much upon the ball As the other clubs have got upon the bat.

THE SCALP LIFTER.
The American League clash has already settled among three clubs—Chicago, Detroit and Boston, with the margin evenly split. These three should be the only clubs to contend for the title.

But the National League upheaval is one of the greatest ever arranged in all the history of the game. No one club is anywhere out of it, and it is possible for the tallender to reach the top within ten days.

The one club in the league with pennant class, the Braves, has been so badly crippled they have never been able to show their proper form. And among the other seven is a club that has been called as a championship machine beyond ordinary value. We still figure the Braves good enough to get going and win, but the margin will hardly be extensive, and among the other seven there will be no great gap at the end of the year if anything like even fortune should prevail.

Bryan and Larry McLean both jumped on the same day, but one came back with a pipe and the other with a padded brick, deftly concealed up his sleeve.

Golters Find Trouble A-Plenty at East Lake
All day Monday at East Lake speculation was rife among the players as to the highest limit in medal score for the qualifying round that would land a player in the championship flight. It was generally agreed that a 91 and possibly a 92 or 93 would entitle a player to compete for the highest medal score in the qualifying round. The experts who were taking the day's medal score, and who were not at all sure of their estimates.

Scores turned in in Tuesday's play show that both home talent and visitors found the lake course a tough proposition to undertake. The medal score for the first round was 91, which was not until late in the afternoon that Nelson Whitney gave a 79 for Monday in the first round.

Answer yes to all of the above. But comes a demurrer. None of the field was exceeding strong that none of those left to finish would get under that mark. When on the day, he up his 82, several strokes below anything else recorded up to that time, but he did not equal his performance. But as the day wore on the tendency was high above that mark. And it was not until late in the afternoon that Nelson Whitney, present title holder, sank a putt for a 79, which was the best score he had equalled the Texas score.

The best of the big field were finding

The Week was favorable. Light to moderate moisture is everywhere, sufficient for immediate planting of the soil. There are only a few complaints of the soil in all sections the crop is well cultivated and as a whole, satisfactory. In the northwestern part of Oklahoma there is complaint of a poor stand of cotton in Texas, where it is planted and located in the hills. In the south, it is planted in the hills and is reported active in some sections. It is well established in some sections and continues in good condition and early fruits are abundant.

Mean temperatures ranged from 1 to 3 degrees below normal over the north and central and elsewhere there was an excess of from 1 to 4 degrees. In the south, mean temperatures ranged from 80 to 82 or over.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16.—In the cotton to be issued if the equipment used to plant the crop is too hot. The week was very favorable; light to moderate showers occurred in much of the area. The weather is favorable for the immediate needs, while now there are only local showers. The crop is well advanced in all sections; the crop is well cultivated and making satisfactory advancement, except in Oklahoma, where there is considerable loss of seed and slow growth of late planted corn, and locally in Texas, where it continues too wet and too hot. In the southern trucking districts crops are well advanced, and early fruits and melons are being shipped.
